

Alumni Role Vital—

API To AU: The Quest For A University

In 1960 Alabama Polytechnic Institute, familiarly known as Auburn, became a university in name. The newest—and greatest—challenge for the 103-year-old college with a history of challenges became that of becoming a university in fact.

Auburn University stood at the beginning of the Sixties as one of the two largest institutions in a state where the educational level corresponded to state support—lowest in the nation. No one likes to pay more taxes, and Alabamians defended their poor efforts for education by arguing that Alabama was a poor state and could not afford to give its children a good education.

But Auburn's President Ralph B. Draughon thought differently. He saw that "the half-measures, the lack of understanding, the indifference of our people to the needs of education in general. . . are the major barriers to the progress of Alabama."

Auburn, the other colleges, and all the elementary and high schools were caught in the tail-chasing frustration of proration, poor salaries, lack of equipment, over-crowded buildings, and need for faculty. The knowledge that the Russian education had produced Sputnik and that with the Sixties would come the largest growth of population ever to hit the schools and college campuses were additional burdens.

The views were simpler in 1960. Coming out of the apathetic Fifties, no one seemed to guess the massive questions the new generation would bring to higher education along with the problems created by their numbers. But administrators did know that with the growing numbers of students seeking admission to colleges, enrollment could not be held steady.

Needed: Teachers, Books, Equipment

For 60 years a Land-Grant college dedicated to raising the way of life for the people of Alabama, Auburn could not abdicate its responsibility to provide for the growing numbers who wanted a college education. Those incoming students would need teachers to teach them, buildings to meet in, books in the library to use, places to live, scientific equipment to work with—more everything, and quickly.

The enrollment for fall of 1960 reached 8,829 students. In the five years prior, enrollment had grown 1,000 students. In the next five years enrollment would jump 3,000 to total 11,903 in 1965. By the end of the decade it would almost double to reach the present 14,525.

Stretch Scant Skirt

The enrollment could not be held steady. Auburn had the choice of stretching the already scant skirt of state support past the ripping point of mediocrity, or she could seek private support to lengthen the skirt to cover the bulky, growing lot of students seeking admission.

Auburn had already learned the embarrassment that results when too little is stretched too far in the loss of accreditation for two engineering departments in 1957. Response to the emergency drive for engineering in 1958 indicated that alumni and friends of Auburn cared enough for higher education to support Auburn. Early in 1960, the newly-created Auburn Development Council set out to raise $10 million over the next ten years.

State Sees Need

The immediate goals were a nuclear science center, 250,000 volumes for the insufficient library, scientific equipment, and a permanent university endowment. The Auburn University Foundation was incorporated and 1,000 alumni volunteers enlisted to help with the fund drive. By the end of the year $2½ million was on the account books.

In 1963 a joint legislative program with the University of Alabama resulted in the state's first real awareness of the plight of higher education. A second state-wide program added further increases in appropriations. From $7 million in 1960 the state appropriations increased to $18 million in 1969. Those funds meant new faculty, new buildings, and salary raises, bringing salaries at Auburn nearer to those across the nation.

In 1965, alumni launched the Auburn Annual Giving Program, giving alumni an annual opportunity to support Auburn. AAG aimed to provide salary supplements for outstanding teachers—to enable them to stay at Auburn without sacrifice. Believing the heart and strength of a university lies in its faculty, each year more alumni support the program which this year passed $228,000. As a result of alumni gifts, twenty-three Auburn faculty hold the designation of Alumni Professor. (Not all gifts are for salaries. Many alumni designate their gifts for other areas of the University which they wish to support.)

Philpott Succeeds Draughton

Also in 1965, Dr. Draughton retired, leaving a strong program for his successor on the 1,871-acre Auburn campus, Dr. Harry M. Philpott. During Dr. Philpott's years Auburn has completed a building program and has added Auburn University at Montgomery with its 500-acre campus. In 1968 Dr. Philpott presented Auburn's 50,000th degree to an engineering graduate who had co-oped (a quarter here and a quarter working in Huntsville) his way through school. Auburn has now awarded 55,430 degrees and almost half, or 25,474, have been earned during the past decade.

Buildings Rise Over Campus

In the decade of changes, none have been so apparent as those to the campus. Down went the massive oaks. Up went the modern Draughton Library (with holdings made adequate by alumni support of the Development Program), the Home Economics Building, and physical sciences center housing the Departments of Mathematics, Chemistry, Physics, and the Computer Center.

Completed in the second half of the decade were the Leach Nuclear Science Center (built largely by alumni funds), new dorms for women, apartments for married students, and Memorial Coliseum. The most recently completed building is Haley Center for Liberal Arts and Education, which will accommodate 8,000 students (or the student body of 1960) at one time.

Under construction are a small animal clinic and a classroom building near the Large Animal Clinic on Wire Road. When completed, the new buildings will permit the entire removal of the School of Veterinary Medicine to the Wire Road site.

Social Changes

The demands for relevance during the past decade have wrought other changes. In 1964 Harold Franklin entered Auburn's Graduate School as the first Negro student. Today Auburn has Negro graduates in many fields and about 100 Negro students on campus.

The idea of adult education drifted South, and the demand for adult education programs became more urgent as industry and equal opportunity moved into Alabama. And, although Auburn does not offer night classes, its School of Education recently began offering degrees for teachers of adult education. On the books and soon to be in operation are courses which will allow students to reach, understand, and work with the disadvantaged and get credit for their time and effort.

The concept of loco parentis weakened as girls come nearer to having the freedom of Auburn men. Co-ediquette (the handbook of co-ed rules and regulations) no longer decrees skirt lengths, nor bans slacks from classrooms and library. Although dorm hours exist they have been liberalized, and are likely to become further loosened in coming years.

Girls can visit men in their fraternity dorm rooms or apartments, and the co-ed who cooks supper for her boy friend near no longer fears the wrath of the rules. Signing in and out of the dorm remains mandatory—even in the experimental dorm where the girls must sign in by 6 a.m.—and many of the privileges still require that O. K. from mom and dad on a form for the housemother.

Curriculum Changes

Ten years has brought change to the curriculum also. New graduate programs have been added along with the undergraduate School of Business. Physical education is compulsory for three quarters instead of six. Remedial math and English courses no longer exist. All freshmen and sophomores study a broad liberal arts program. Pass-fail electives for a total of 20 credit hours permit students to branch out to areas of interest without damage to their grade-point average. Latin is being taught for the first time in 50 years. Compulsory ROTC ends with spring quarter.

Freshmen enrollment at Auburn has been limited to 2,500 students, and at the same time the junior college system in Alabama has mushroomed. Hence, the student who first puts foot on the campus is as likely to be a transfer student as a freshmen. A competitive and frantic world has meant that the students by and large are more serious about life, politics, war, and pollution, if not about education. Competition has stressed the degree to the detriment of the education. But some campus observers predict that student questioning will lead us closer to the goal of a university and further from the accusation of being a mass degree mill.

Auburn has not been exempt from inflation. In 1960 student fees were $60 per quarter. In the fall tuition was $120 and this summer will be $150.

But even with the fee increases, with the increased funds from the legislature, and with federal funding for special programs, Auburn remains behind, still attempting to stretch that scanty skirt. Prices shoot up higher and needs grow faster than money. For instance, the red tape of securing funds for a building, getting architectural plans, and bids takes so long that by the time the construction starts the money has, in effect, shrunk so that that amount estimated to build and furnish the building will only build it. The furnishings must come elsewhere. Such is the story of the new buildings for the School of Veterinary Medicine. There will be no money to equip them unless alumni raise it.

In the next ten years Auburn's needs will once again be critical. Major new buildings are needed for the Schools of Architecture and Fine Arts, Engineering, and Pharmacy, and permanent laboratories for fisheries. Expanding population means expanding needs for housing facilities on campus, more books for the library, more money for faculty. . . .

Auburn alumni have had a major role in building the Auburn that begins the Seventies. We have much to be proud of. We have much to do.

In recent weeks we have seen the words "silent majority" used over and over again with evident pride. One can doubt that the epithet is cause for pride.

In the following pages appear the names of those who are among the minority—those who left the ranks of the silent to express support of Auburn University through a gift to Auburn Annual Giving.

In the Seventies will you remain among the silent, or will you join us—students, faculty, administrators, alumni, friends—who believe in Auburn and support it?

Century Club For 1969

ONE of the bright spots of Auburn Annual Giving for 1969 was a modest increase in membership in the Century Club. In the past year 466 individuals made gifts of $10 or more.

The Century Club is simply a means of expressing appreciation to those giving special financial support to Auburn University through the annual giving program.

AAG operates without any formal system of pledging or installment payments. Alumni may, as some now do, make periodic gifts during the calendar year and thus qualify for the Century Club.
